World View

Andrew Antonio, head of marketing and communications, told us World View gets its name and part of its reason for being from the changes in a person's outlook from seeing the world whole, borderless, from an altitude high enough to be at the edge of space. They make very high altitude balloons that can carry passengers (at $75k each) in comfort, weather radar equipment, or communications equipment; keep them aloft for days or weeks, and bring them back intact; for a small fraction of what a rocket would cost. By using the winds at different altitudes, they can steer the vehicle and keep it over one spot, providing, for example, Internet to Africa or details of a hurricane.
