Is This Funny?

Dave Fitzsimmons, cartoonist and columnist for the Arizona Daily Star, is a Pulitzer Finalist and syndicated to over 800 news publications around the world. He didn't just talk (passionately) about faith, fear, and hope, but drew cartoons of club members as he went along, all to illustrate what a cartoonist does, to speak out, to criticize, and to make us laugh, usually at ourselves.

He said we have a remarkable tradition of freedom. He spoke of Bill Mauldin in WW2, whose characters, Willie and Joe, always complained about US officers. When called before Patton and asked what would happen to critics like him if Hitler or Stalin were in charge, he answered, "Isn't that the point?" He mentioned a Pennsylvania governor named Pennypacker who outlawed cartoons of himself drawn as a parrot. The cartoonist then drew him as fruit. Fitzsimmons drew cartoons of Jack Carter, Justin Dodds, Becky Roberts, and Pat Pease, exaggerating features and constantly making jokes, but always making his point, that we laugh during challenging times. He spoke of Gretta, who survived Auschwitz as a child, who tells us to "find the funny." He claimed we take comfort in trying times from inappropriate and tasteless jokes, and then did a 10-minute comedy routine about his bladder cancer and an exam by way of a catheter. He claims we are all hilarious comedians, but the professionals write it all down.

But all through his high-energy, passionate presentation his theme was clear: we Americans have a deep and profound faith in our ideals, our freedom to speak out and criticize, our strength to laugh at our hardships and obstacles, and our endless hope for a better world.
